Purpose and scope

This PDF preserves the full substance of the conversation about preparing for a Transcom Team Leader interview. It brings together the user prompts, recent online research, guidance on the STAR method, the Transcom role and review findings, the resume-to-role alignment, and the 15 tailored interview answers. The final answers are intentionally more leadership- and management-focused.

The research was refreshed on October 6, 2026. Candidate reports and employee reviews are anecdotal and can vary by site, campaign, client, interviewer, and date. Transcom's official job posting is treated as the strongest indicator of what the role requires.

Accuracy rule used throughout: No team size, performance gain, disciplinary outcome, campaign detail, or other result has been invented. Bracketed text such as [confirm team size] marks a detail that should be replaced only with a true, defensible fact before the interview.

Conversation archive

The thread developed through the following requests:

1. "Can you search online for Transcom Team Lead interview questions? Prioritize questions or posts from within the last three years."
2. "Is there any information on whether or not they prioritize certain types of answers? For example, the STAR method?"
3. "Is there any more info you can find about the TL role, interview, reviews, etc.?"
4. "Take my resume and the pasted job description info, and answer the top 15 most likely interview questions using the STAR method."
5. "Make some of these answers more leadership, management leaning."
6. "Make this entire thread a downloadable PDF."

The sections that follow contain the consolidated response to each request.

Recent interview research (2023-2026)

What Transcom officially emphasizes

The strongest evidence is Transcom's own Greenville, South Carolina Team Leader posting. It defines the role around ownership of client and Transcom KPIs, effective coaching conversations, performance management and accountability, advisor adherence, and best-in-class customer service.

The Team Leader is expected to:

- Lead, coach, develop, motivate, and support Customer Service Advisors.
- Review performance reports and create individualized targets and coaching plans.
- Monitor real-time adherence and live or recorded customer interactions.
- Participate in calibration and partner with Quality Assurance and Training.
- Identify, address, document, and escalate performance or operational risks.
- Apply progressive-discipline procedures consistently and appropriately.
- Promote engagement, recognize progress, and build a pipeline of future talent.
- Solve process problems, communicate changes clearly, and lead by example.

In practical terms, the interview is likely to reward candidates who can show that they lead people through observable or measurable improvement—not merely that they are dependable high performers themselves.

Recent candidate-reported questions

Recent Team Leader reports are limited, but they point toward people-management and judgment questions:

- February 2025, Jaipur: past experience, education, experience handling a team, number of people handled, conflict management, and “core concepts.”
- October 2023, Iloilo: skills, why the candidate left the previous position, and a process reported to take about one week.
- April 2023, Osijek (secondary context): five-year career outlook, financial matters, managing a team, difficult coworkers, and prioritizing tasks and deliverables. This report is just outside a strict three-year window as of October 2026, so it is supporting—not primary—evidence.

- Transcom Interview Questions, Glassdoor Australia

When the candidate reports are combined with the official job description, the most likely interview themes are coaching an underperformer, managing KPIs, setting SMART targets, accountability, conflict, motivation, adherence, quality, escalation, prioritization, change communication, stakeholder partnership, and “Why Transcom?”

Does Transcom prioritize STAR answers?

No public Transcom source found in this research establishes STAR as a mandatory scoring method or official interview rule. However:

- An older Transcom candidate response on Indeed refers to “STAR method” questions.
- A 2025 Reddit discussion advises Transcom candidates to prepare with STAR.
- The official role asks for evidence-heavy competencies—coaching effectiveness, performance improvement, accountability, data-based decisions, and risk handling—that are naturally demonstrated through STAR stories.

The safest conclusion is: STAR is strongly useful, but it is not publicly confirmed as a mandatory Transcom rubric. Use it for behavioral questions, but do not force it onto simple factual questions such as availability, education, team size, or why you left a role.

- 2025 Transcom interview discussion, Reddit /r/BPOinPH

The strongest answer pattern

For a behavioral question, use STAR + Learning:

- Situation: Give only the context the interviewer needs.
- Task: State what you were responsible for.
- Action: Spend most of the answer here. Use “I,” name the steps you took, and show leadership judgment.
- Result: Give the verified outcome. Use a number only if you can explain how it was measured.
- Learning: Close with what you would repeat or apply as a Transcom Team Leader.

A good time balance is roughly 15% Situation, 10% Task, 55% Action, 15% Result, and 5% Learning. Aim for 60–90 seconds unless the interviewer asks for more detail.

For a hypothetical question, use this sequence:

1. Assess the facts and the employee’s perspective.
2. Identify the behavior or root cause connected to the metric.
3. Agree on a clear action plan and support.
4. Communicate or escalate where policy and risk require it.

5. Measure progress and follow up.

Employee-review themes

Team Leader reviews on Indeed mention positive experiences with coworkers, promotion opportunities, and paid time off, alongside concerns about workload, compensation, management, and contract stability. Glassdoor Team Leader reviews include 2026 comments about management disconnects, training gaps, remote-work benefits, and limited growth.

These are self-selected reports, not representative survey findings. Use them to prepare questions about manager support, onboarding, staffing, workload, campaign stability, and advancement—not to make assumptions about the Greenville site or a specific client.

What the role is likely to assess

Competency	What a strong answer demonstrates
Coaching	Diagnosis before advice; behavior-specific feedback; practice; follow-up
KPI ownership	Knows the metric, finds the driver, chooses a targeted action, checks movement
Accountability	Clear expectations, documentation, consistency, support, and timely escalation
Leadership style	Adapts to the individual without changing the standard
Quality and compliance	Accuracy, privacy, policy discipline, and calibration
Prioritization	Balances customer impact, urgency, risk, adherence, and deadlines
Communication	Active listening, empathy, clarity, concise instructions, confirmation of understanding
Talent development	Builds confidence, independence, and readiness for greater responsibility
Collaboration	Partners with QA, Training, peers, and operations instead of solving in isolation
Change leadership	Explains what changed and why, checks understanding, observes adoption

Resume and job-description alignment

Leadership evidence to emphasize

- Churpeyes — Assistant Manager: formal management foundation through daily operations, scheduling, financial reporting, inventory, staff training, coaching, compliance, and team-development work.
- LTN Healthcare — Patient Services Representative: privacy, documentation, account review, sensitive communication, and functional coordination described in the thread. When discussing CNAs, say you coordinated requirements, monitored completion, verified time/work records, and followed up on discrepancies. Do not call them direct reports unless that was formally true.

- Spectrum — Inbound Sales Representative: trained new representatives using role-play and reverse shadowing; navigated a merger and high volumes of non-eligible callers while maintaining focus on qualified needs.
- Double Dogs — Guest Services Associate: trained and mentored new team members and supported faster, more confident onboarding.
- Alorica — Technical Support Specialist: ranked in the top 4% for customer satisfaction and first-call resolution; documented 50+ daily cases in CRM.
- Drake Software — Application Support Analyst: uses interviews, documentation, data, and software behavior to perform root-cause analysis; manages multiple complex cases with accuracy and follow-up.
- UberEATS — Delivery Partner: maintained a 4.9/5 customer rating through communication, issue resolution, adaptability, and self-direction.

Role-to-evidence map

Transcom need	Verified or thread-supported evidence	Safe positioning
Lead a team	Churpeyes assistant-management experience	"I supervised day-to-day operations and coached staff." Add the true team size only after confirming it.
Coach and develop	Churpeyes, Spectrum, and Double Dogs	Demonstration, role-play, observation, feedback, reverse shadowing, and follow-up
Work with KPIs	Alorica top 4% CSAT/FCR; UberEATS 4.9/5; Spectrum sales goals	Strong frontline KPI discipline; do not claim ownership of a team dashboard unless true
Analyze performance	Drake root-cause analysis; LTN account review; Churpeyes reporting	Evidence-based decision making transfers well to advisor scorecards
Set SMART targets	No explicit formal SMART-plan example in the resume	Present as the approach you would apply unless you can add a verified example
Build accountability	Churpeyes operational oversight; LTN verification and follow-up	Set expectations, monitor, document, follow up, support, and escalate consistently
Partner with QA/Training	Training experience is verified; formal QA calibration is not	Explain how you would align with QA and Training; do not claim calibration ownership
Ensure compliance	LTN HIPAA; Carrabba's safety/operations; Churpeyes procedures; Drake guidance	Strong direct transfer to policy and client-standard adherence
Manage risk/escalation	Drake complex issues; LTN inconsistencies; Double Dogs billing disputes	Establish facts, act within authority, document, and escalate risk promptly
Manage adherence/workflow	Churpeyes scheduling; Drake case prioritization; Alorica high volume	Transferable; do not claim workforce-management software experience unless true
Contact-center experience	Spectrum inbound sales and Alorica technical support	Direct exposure to volume, CRM, CSAT, FCR, sales goals, and customer communication

Claims to verify before the interview

Do not state the following as accomplished facts unless you can supply a real example:

- Managing at least 10 direct reports or any exact team size.
- Two to five years of contact-center leadership.
- Owning a team KPI dashboard, formal performance reviews, or progressive discipline.
- Creating formal SMART coaching plans.
- Monitoring recorded calls or participating in calibration sessions.
- Managing a virtual team or using workforce-management/adherence software.
- A percentage improvement in team efficiency, customer satisfaction, onboarding time, or sales.

A defensible summary is:

“My leadership foundation combines assistant-management experience, staff coaching, new-hire training, compliance oversight, and measurable contact-center performance. I have not yet held a formal contact-center Team Leader title, but I understand frontline KPIs and bring a structured, evidence-based approach to coaching, accountability, and customer service.”

Top 15 likely interview questions and tailored answers

The answers below are written for speaking, not memorizing word-for-word. Replace every bracketed item with a true detail, then practice the story until the structure feels natural.

1. Tell me about yourself and why you want this Team Leader role.

Best structure: Present–past–future, with STAR evidence inside the answer.

Situation / background: I bring more than ten years of customer service and operations experience, including contact-center roles at Alorica and Spectrum, formal supervisory experience as an Assistant Manager at Churpeyes, and current technical problem-solving work at Drake Software.

Task / leadership focus: Across those roles, the common thread has been improving service, protecting standards, solving problems, and helping other people become more confident and consistent.

Action: At Churpeyes, I supervised daily operations, scheduling, reporting, inventory, and staff coaching. At Spectrum and Double Dogs, I trained and mentored new employees. At Alorica, I learned to work closely with CSAT and first-call-resolution expectations. At Drake, I now use root-cause analysis and evidence-based troubleshooting on complex application issues.

Result and fit: I ranked in the top 4% at Alorica for customer satisfaction and first-call resolution, and I have continued building the coaching, compliance, communication, and analytical skills this role requires. I am ready to combine that experience in a position where I am accountable for both people development and performance results.

Leadership connection: This answer positions you as more than an experienced individual contributor: it shows a progression toward leading performance through others.

2. Tell me about your leadership experience. How many people have you led?

Situation: My clearest formal management experience was as an Assistant Manager at Churpeyes. I also have functional leadership experience at LTN Healthcare and coaching experience at Spectrum and Double Dogs.

Task: In those settings, I needed to keep work organized, make expectations clear, support employees or partners, and follow up when requirements were not completed correctly.

Action: At Churpeyes, I supervised daily operations, scheduling, reporting, inventory, staff training, and compliance. At LTN, the CNAs were not my direct reports, but I coordinated requirements, monitored training completion, verified time and work records connected with Medicare documentation, and followed up on discrepancies. At Spectrum and Double Dogs, I trained and mentored new employees.

Result: Those experiences taught me how to set expectations, observe performance, resolve discrepancies, and maintain accountability both through formal supervision and through influence without direct authority.

Say the scope precisely: “I directly supervised approximately [confirm Churpeyes team size] employees at Churpeyes. At LTN, I coordinated and monitored requirements involving approximately [confirm number, if known] CNAs, but they were not my direct reports.”

3. Tell me about a time you coached someone who needed to improve.

Situation: At Spectrum, a new representative needed additional help with [confirm the actual skill or behavior].

Task: I needed to help the representative improve without taking over the work or lowering the expected standard.

Action: I broke the interaction into specific behaviors, demonstrated the expected approach, and used role-playing to practice the difficult portion. I then used reverse shadowing so I could observe the representative applying it. My feedback identified what was already working and the one behavior that would make the biggest difference. I gave the representative another opportunity to practice and followed up rather than treating coaching as a one-time conversation.

Result: The representative improved in [confirm the observable result], and the training method supported stronger readiness, productivity, and collaboration.

Leadership connection: As a Transcom Team Leader, I would use the same observe-coach-practice-follow-up cycle and connect the behavior to the advisor's relevant KPI.

4. Tell me about a time you held someone accountable.

Situation: At [choose one true setting: Churpeyes or LTN], I had to address [confirm an actual missed requirement, documentation discrepancy, attendance issue, or performance behavior].

Task: I needed to protect the standard while treating the person fairly and giving them a clear path to correct the issue.

Action: I verified the facts first, met with the person privately, described the specific behavior or discrepancy, and explained its impact. I listened for a knowledge, resource, or communication barrier. I restated the expectation, identified the next action and deadline, documented the follow-up, and checked completion. At LTN, I used this approach when coordinating training, time, work-completion, or Medicare-documentation requirements, while recognizing that the CNAs were not my direct reports.

Result: [Confirm the person's response, correction, or operational outcome.]

Leadership connection: Accountability works best when the standard, support, follow-up, and consequences are all clear. At Transcom, I would follow the established coaching and progressive-discipline process rather than improvising.

5. Tell me about a time you used performance metrics to improve results.

Situation: At Alorica, customer satisfaction and first-call resolution were key measures, and I managed more than 50 technical-support cases per day.

Task: I needed to resolve issues efficiently while protecting the customer experience and maintaining accurate CRM documentation.

Action: I researched issues carefully, explained solutions in clear language, confirmed resolution before closing the interaction, and documented the relevant facts and steps. I treated repeat contacts and customer confusion as signals that the diagnosis or explanation needed to improve.

Result: I ranked in the top 4% of agents for customer satisfaction and first-call resolution while sustaining a high daily case volume.

Leadership connection: That was individual performance rather than ownership of an entire team dashboard, so I would say that plainly. As a Team Leader, I would extend the same discipline by reviewing an advisor's trend data, observing interactions, identifying the behavior behind the gap, setting a focused target, and checking progress after coaching.

6. Describe a time you used data or root-cause analysis to solve a problem.

Situation: At Drake Software, customers report complex application issues involving calculations, forms, field mapping, carryforwards, depreciation, basis, credits, deductions, or federal-to-state data flow.

Task: My responsibility is to identify the real source of the problem rather than treating only the visible symptom.

Action: I interview the user, review relevant data and software behavior, and guide the customer through structured diagnostic steps. I compare the evidence with technical documentation, IRS guidance, training materials, and historical cases. I isolate the likely cause, test the conclusion against the facts, and document an evidence-based resolution or next step.

Result: This method allows me to resolve unfamiliar issues accurately and give the customer a clear path forward while preserving useful documentation for follow-up.

Leadership connection: I would use the same discipline when a team KPI drops: separate knowledge, behavior, process, and system causes before deciding whether the right response is coaching, retraining, workflow correction, or escalation.

7. Tell me about a time you managed competing priorities.

Situation: In high-volume support roles, I have had to balance customer urgency, accurate diagnosis, documentation, and follow-up. At Alorica, that meant more than 50 cases per day; at Drake, it means multiple complex cases that may require research.

Task: I had to keep work moving without allowing speed to create repeat contacts, incomplete records, or avoidable errors.

Action: I established the facts early, prioritized by customer impact, urgency, risk, and the next required action, and kept records current while I worked. I communicated when research or follow-up was needed and used documentation so work did not stall or lose continuity.

Result: At Alorica, I maintained the case volume while ranking in the top 4% for customer satisfaction and first-call resolution. In my current work, the same structure supports timely follow-up and accurate resolution of complex cases.

Leadership connection: As a Team Leader, I would apply that framework to service risks, adherence, coaching commitments, escalations, and reporting—and communicate quickly when priorities change.

8. Tell me about a conflict or escalation you handled.

Situation: At Double Dogs, I assisted customers who disputed a charge or did not understand the pricing structure.

Task: I needed to reduce frustration, establish the facts, and resolve the concern within the available guidelines.

Action: I allowed the customer to explain the issue without interruption, clarified the exact point of disagreement, reviewed the transaction or pricing, and explained the information in straightforward language. When appropriate, I used professional negotiation to identify an acceptable resolution and kept my tone calm and respectful.

Result: I resolved billing disputes and reduced the need for further escalation.

Leadership connection: As a Team Leader, I would address both sides of an escalation: stabilize the customer issue, then review the interaction with the advisor, recognize what they handled well, and coach the specific behavior that could prevent or better manage a similar situation.

If asked specifically about employee conflict: Use a real employee example if you have one. Do not relabel a customer dispute as an employee-performance conversation. A safe structure is facts → private discussion → each perspective → shared standard → agreed action → follow-up.

9. Tell me about a time you led or adapted through change.

Situation: At Spectrum, a company merger created high call volumes that included many customers who were not eligible for the available offers.

Task: I needed to remain productive during the change and help maintain focus on qualified customer needs.

Action: I developed a faster way to identify qualified leads, prioritized customers who could benefit from the products, and used needs analysis to recommend appropriate solutions. I stayed focused on what had changed operationally while keeping the customer conversation clear. In the same role, I trained new representatives through role-playing and reverse shadowing, which helped turn process information into practical behavior.

Result: I maintained sales performance during the disruption and contributed to team sales goals.

Leadership connection: When communicating change, I would explain what changed, why it matters, what behavior is now expected, and where employees can get help—then verify adoption through observation and results.

10. Tell me about a time you delivered exceptional customer service.

Situation: As an UberEATS delivery partner, I regularly handled time-sensitive orders, changing logistics, and customers who needed clear updates.

Task: I needed to meet tight deadlines while preventing uncertainty or a delay from becoming a poor customer experience.

Action: I planned ahead, adjusted quickly when conditions changed, communicated proactively about order status, and addressed problems directly instead of waiting for the customer to ask. I also paid attention to recurring feedback and adjusted how I communicated and managed the delivery process.

Result: I maintained a 4.9/5 customer rating.

Leadership connection: The lesson I would bring to a team is that excellent service is not only the final resolution. It is also expectation-setting, ownership, clear updates, and recovery when the original plan changes.

11. Tell me about a time you ensured quality, compliance, or policy adherence.

Situation: At LTN Healthcare, I worked with confidential medical, financial, and personal information and supported processes tied to accurate service and reimbursement documentation.

Task: I needed to help patients, families, caregivers, healthcare professionals, and CNAs move work forward without compromising HIPAA, privacy, or documentation requirements.

Action: I reviewed accounts and supporting documents for missing information or inconsistencies, maintained detailed electronic records, and explained the next required step clearly. In the functional-leadership portion of my work, I coordinated timely training completion, verified time and completed-work records associated with Medicare requirements, and followed up on discrepancies. I did not treat urgency as permission to skip a control.

Result: Work could proceed on the basis of accurate records, concerns were addressed professionally, and confidential information remained protected.

Leadership connection: I reinforce compliance by explaining why the standard matters, checking understanding, monitoring execution, documenting accurately, and addressing deviations promptly.

12. Tell me about a time you trained or onboarded a new employee.

Situation: At Double Dogs, I trained and mentored new team members; at Spectrum, I helped train new representatives.

Task: I needed to help people become accurate, confident, and increasingly independent without overwhelming them.

Action: I explained the process in manageable steps, demonstrated it, used role-playing for difficult interactions, and observed the employee doing the work through reverse shadowing or direct practice. My feedback started with what was correct, then focused on the highest-impact adjustment. I provided another opportunity to apply the feedback and remained available for questions.

Result: My resume reflects improved onboarding efficiency and team performance within the first month at Double Dogs, and stronger productivity and collaboration through the Spectrum training approach. I would not quote a percentage unless I could verify it.

Leadership connection: This is how I would “build the bench” at Transcom: create capable employees who understand the standard, can self-correct, and are ready for more responsibility.

13. How do you motivate a team and adapt to different personalities?

Situation: At Churpeyes, consistent customer service depended on employees understanding procedures and feeling supported in carrying them out.

Task: As Assistant Manager, I needed to promote stronger performance while keeping expectations consistent across employees with different experience and confidence levels.

Action: I clarified what good performance looked like, explained why the procedure mattered, and adjusted the support rather than the standard. Some employees needed demonstration or practice; others needed a clear checkpoint and room to work independently. I answered questions, coached procedure and compliance, modeled the expected behavior, and recognized progress through [confirm the actual recognition or feedback used].

Result: The role gave me practical experience supporting operational efficiency, customer satisfaction, and team development. I would discuss the improvement without inventing a percentage.

Leadership connection: My approach is to understand what drives the individual, remove legitimate obstacles, recognize progress, and keep the performance target visible. Motivation and accountability should reinforce each other.

14. Tell me about a time you worked across teams or stakeholder groups.

Situation: At LTN Healthcare, authorization or reimbursement barriers could involve incomplete or inconsistent information across patients, families, caregivers, CNAs, and healthcare professionals.

Task: Although these individuals were not all my direct reports, I needed to coordinate accurate information and next steps so the issue could move forward.

Action: I reviewed the account and supporting documentation, identified the missing or conflicting information, contacted the appropriate party, explained what was needed, and recorded each update and follow-up in the electronic system. When coordinating CNA-related requirements, I monitored completion, verified records, and followed up on discrepancies without overstating my authority.

Result: This supported timely, professional resolution and kept stakeholders working from accurate information.

Leadership connection: I have not claimed formal ownership of a contact-center calibration process, but this experience reflects the same partnership discipline I would bring to QA, Training, peers, and operations leadership: shared facts, clear ownership, consistent messaging, and follow-through.

15. Why should we hire you as a Transcom Team Leader?

Best structure: Evidence-fit-impact. This is a closing pitch, so do not force an artificial STAR story.

You should hire me because I bring a useful combination of formal operations leadership, frontline contact-center credibility, coaching experience, compliance discipline, and analytical problem-solving. At Churpeyes, I supervised operations and coached staff. At Spectrum and Double Dogs, I helped new employees learn through demonstration, role-play, observation, and feedback. At Alorica, I ranked in the top 4% for customer satisfaction and first-call resolution while handling more than 50 cases per day.

At LTN, I learned to coordinate sensitive work, verify documentation, and follow up on requirements without losing empathy. At Drake, I use data and root-cause analysis to resolve complex problems.

I have not yet held the exact title of contact-center Team Leader, and I would not overstate responsibilities I have not owned. What I do bring is the ability to learn the operation, set clear expectations, coach specific behaviors, maintain accountability, and use evidence to decide what a person or process needs next. That matches the way Transcom describes this role.

Bonus question: What would your first 30, 60, and 90 days look like?

First 30 days: Learn the people, client requirements, Transcom procedures, KPIs, reports, tools, escalation paths, and existing team strengths. Observe interactions and coaching, participate in calibration, and build credibility through consistency.

By 60 days: Establish a dependable coaching rhythm, individualized SMART targets, documented follow-up, and recognition practices. Partner closely with QA, Training, peers, and operations leadership so advisors receive one clear message.

By 90 days: Evaluate trends, adjust coaching plans, identify developing talent, address recurring process barriers, and propose evidence-based improvements. The goal would be a team with clear expectations, regular feedback, stronger ownership, and a visible development pipeline.

Leadership upgrade: phrases to use

Basic framing	Stronger leadership framing
"I helped a coworker."	"I diagnosed the gap, clarified the standard, practiced the behavior, observed performance, and followed up."
"I solved the customer's problem."	"I stabilized the interaction, established the facts, resolved the immediate issue, documented it, and looked for a repeat cause."
"I kept everyone motivated."	"I adapted my support, recognized progress, removed legitimate obstacles, and reinforced the performance target."
"We improved."	"I reviewed the evidence, selected an intervention, monitored the result, and adjusted the plan."
"I told them what to do."	"I explained the expectation and its purpose, checked understanding, observed execution, and held a follow-up."
"I escalated it."	"I acted within my authority, documented the risk, and escalated promptly with the facts and recommended next step."

Likely follow-up questions

Prepare short, exact answers for these:

- How many people did you directly supervise at Churpeyes?
- How many CNAs did you coordinate at LTN, and what authority did you have?
- Which KPIs did you personally own, and which did you only work under?
- How was the Alorica top-4% ranking calculated?
- What did you do when coaching did not lead to improvement?
- Have you ever delivered formal corrective action?
- How would you manage real-time adherence?
- How would you prepare for a calibration session?
- Are you available for nights, weekends, and holidays?
- Why are Drake, LTN, and UberEATS listed as concurrent current roles?
- Why are you leaving your current role or roles?

Safe gap-bridge language

"I have not yet owned that exact responsibility in the same setting, but I have handled the underlying work through [relevant example]. My approach would be to learn Transcom's process quickly, align with my manager and support partners, and apply that experience through clear expectations, documentation, coaching, and follow-up."

Questions to ask the interviewer

1. Which KPIs will be most important for this team during the first 90 days?
2. What team size and shift would this role support?
3. How often are coaching sessions, call observations, and calibrations conducted?
4. What tools are used for adherence and performance reporting?
5. How is Team Leader success measured beyond the team KPI dashboard?
6. How do Quality Assurance and Training partner with Team Leaders at this site?

7. What distinguishes the strongest Team Leaders in the Greenville operation?
8. What does initial Team Leader onboarding look like?
9. What are the biggest current opportunities or challenges on this campaign?
10. How are high-potential advisors prepared for future leadership roles?

Quick study sheet

30-second value proposition

"I combine formal assistant-management experience with direct contact-center performance, employee training, compliance work, and technical root-cause analysis. I have supervised operations, coached new employees, ranked in the top 4% for CSAT and first-call resolution, managed more than 50 cases per day, and maintained a 4.9/5 customer rating in a self-directed role. I am ready to use that experience to set clear expectations, coach specific behaviors, and build an accountable, engaged team."

Five stories to know cold

1. Churpeyes: formal operations leadership, expectations, coaching, and accountability.
2. Spectrum: merger/change plus role-play and reverse-shadow training.
3. Alorica: top-4% CSAT/FCR while handling 50+ cases per day.
4. Drake Software: structured root-cause analysis and evidence-based resolution.
5. LTN Healthcare: compliance, functional coordination, documentation verification, and stakeholder follow-up.

Verified numbers to remember

- Top 4% at Alorica for customer satisfaction and first-call resolution.
- 50+ Alorica cases documented per day.
- 4.9/5 UberEATS customer rating.
- 10+ years of customer service and operations experience, based on the resume's overall history.
- [Confirm direct-report team size] before the interview.

Six leadership verbs

Diagnose. Clarify. Coach. Monitor. Recognize. Escalate.

STAR + Learning reminder

Context briefly → responsibility → your specific actions → verified result → leadership lesson.

The supplied posting describes direct responsibility for team performance and client/Transcom KPIs. Core duties include leading Customer Service Advisors; coaching, motivating, and developing direct reports; monitoring real-time adherence and interactions; reviewing reports; setting individualized targets; managing accountability; applying progressive discipline; participating in calibration; partnering with QA and Training; escalating risks; solving process problems; and promoting positive engagement.

The posting lists strong communication, coaching, data analysis, CRM knowledge, organization, time management, technical comfort, flexible scheduling, and results orientation as required qualities. It says two to five years of contact-center/BPO leadership, at least 10 direct reports, virtual and onsite management, and QA or Training experience would help; those are preferred signals, not facts that should be added to the resume without support.

Location supplied in the posting: 650 Executive Center Drive, Greenville, South Carolina 29615.

Related listing: AC Team Lead Intern

The pasted material also included an internal AC Team Lead Intern program. It is not the same as the external Greenville Team Leader role. The internship is described as a maximum six-month development assignment for people already on the AC campaign in the United States or Canada. It includes classroom learning, mentor shadowing, calls, coaching, performance review, and a practical phase running a team. It does not guarantee a permanent Team Leader position.

The internal criteria emphasize six months on the campaign, a 13-week record for KPIs such as CSAT and Quality, attendance, absence or resolution of corrective action, development effort, and successful completion of screening. Use this information as insight into what Transcom values—not as proof that the same internal eligibility rules govern an external application.

If the campaign is AI chat/email support

The earlier thread noted an apparent connection to an AI chat/email operation in Greenville, but the exact client or campaign was not publicly confirmed. If the interviewer confirms that this is an AI or written-support campaign, emphasize:

- Written clarity, tone, and accuracy.
- Technical judgment and structured troubleshooting.
- Policy discipline and careful handling of sensitive data.
- Knowing when to escalate rather than guess.
- Balancing response speed with a correct, complete answer.
- Coaching employees not to rely uncritically on an automated tool.
- Detecting patterns in defects, knowledge gaps, or repeat contacts.
- Communicating rapid product or policy changes and checking adoption.

Do not name OpenAI or another client as a confirmed campaign unless Transcom does so.
